Money CAN Buy Happiness, Local Association Claims

The old saying that money can't buy happiness is being disproved for 1,250,000 mentally retarded children growing up in the United States for whom money must buy special education, training, and the help they need to get along.

Because they are handicapped they need special help, and help costs money, according to Mrs. Harold McBride, publicity chairman for the Southwest Assn. for Retarded Children, a local organization made up of parents of mentally retarded children.

Support of the Young People's Socials, Boy Scout and Cub Pack troops, along with other recreation facilities and training programs, is sponsored by the SARC, who ask that residents of this area make extra effort in contributing to this worthy cause now during National Retarded Children's Week and that their donations be made to the association, P.O.
